

ACT Values Clarification Worksheet

Acceptance & Commitment Therapy · Identifying Your Life Compass

What Are Values?

Values are not goals — they are directions, not destinations. You can never permanently 'achieve' a value like 'being a caring parent' — but you can move toward it every day. This worksheet helps you identify what matters most, independent of how you feel right now.

Name: _____ Date: _____ Therapist: _____

Part 1 — Rate Your Life Domains

For each life domain, rate: (A) how important this area is to you (0-10) and (B) how consistently you are living in alignment with your values in this area right now (0-10). A large gap between A and B indicates an important area for committed action.

Life Domain	A: Importance (0-10)	B: Living It (0-10)	Gap (A-B)
Family relationships (spouse/partner, children, parents, siblings) _____	_____	_____	_____
Friendships and social connections	_____	_____	_____
Work, career, and professional life	_____	_____	_____
Education and personal learning	_____	_____	_____
Recreation, hobbies, and leisure	_____	_____	_____
Physical health and self-care	_____	_____	_____
Mental/emotional wellbeing	_____	_____	_____
Spiritual life and meaning	_____	_____	_____
Community and citizenship	_____	_____	_____
Personal growth and self-development	_____	_____	_____

Part 2 — Clarify Your Top Values

Choose 2-3 domains where the gap is largest (most important but least aligned). For each, write a specific statement of your value in that area.

Domain 1: _____

My value in this area (complete the sentence: 'It is important to me to be/do...')

One specific action I could take this week that moves toward this value:

Domain 2: _____

My value in this area (complete the sentence: 'It is important to me to be/do...')

One specific action I could take this week that moves toward this value:

Domain 3: _____

My value in this area (complete the sentence: 'It is important to me to be/do...')

One specific action I could take this week that moves toward this value:

Part 3 — The Eulogy Exercise

Imagine someone who loves you deeply is giving a speech about you at the end of a long, well-lived life. What would you most want them to say about how you lived and who you were?

Clinical Guide

Clinician Note: Values are not morality statements — they are chosen directions. Some clients confuse values with goals or with 'should' statements. If a client says 'I should value family more,' explore what that means to them without imposing direction. Values that feel truly chosen (not coerced) are the ones that generate committed action.
